

Ingres (Studies in World Art Book 37)

The great Ingres exhibition now at the Louvre is one of those big, swagger events that the French arts bureaucracy continues to do very well, even at a time when the cultural supremacy of Paris has long vanished. It tells you almost everything you might want to know about the artist, and even a bit more. What it doesn't do is to solve the mystery of Ingres' personality—he was a supreme bourgeois who also succeeded in being one of the supreme rebels of 19th-century art or indeed the art of any other period one might care to name. Like Caravaggio, his opposite in most respects, he is historically recalcitrant, by which I mean that he seems eternally of the present moment, forever ready to shock, either in one way or in another. He never takes quite the direction one expects.

Jean-Auguste-Dominique Ingres was a French Neoclassical painter. Although he considered himself born into a modest family in Montauban, he travelled to Paris to study in the studio of David. In 1802 he made his Salon debut. The precision of Renaissance Flemish art became part of Ingres' style. Ingres' stylistic eclecticism as a pensioner of the French Academy in Rome, Ingres made portrait drawings of his friends and colleagues, including at least ten portraits of the family of a comprehensive list of art history books, chosen for their readability and unique impact on our current cultural and social.
